BEYOND THE LAW OF ATTRACTION

True natural abundance has little to do with the Law of Attraction, although that law is certainly operational at all times, whether we are in the divine flow of natural abundance or not.

The Law of Attraction is a completely neutral and ever-present electromagnetic function of the universe. It's how everything comes into being.

And how are we ourselves, participating in that ongoing process? We are electromagnetic beings; the quality of our thoughts, feelings, words and actions all carry corresponding electromagnetic signatures.

More divinely aligned actions carry higher, finer electromagnetic frequencies. Activity that's out of alignment carries lower, denser frequencies.

And it's all this 24/7 electromagnetic activity we're putting out, that attracts things of similar frequency, causing them to show up in our experience. And it also repels things of unlike frequency. So, we're permanently engaged in a sort of dynamic, call-and-response relationship with the electromagnetic universe.

Creating our own experience of the world, by calling things to ourselves, based upon what we're first putting out there.

And that's why they say the world is a mirror. It's a blank canvas, that you paint your inner and outer electromagnetic activity upon. And the canvas itself--the world itself--pulls into your life that which corresponds to the frequencies that you painted on it.

In a very simplified nutshell, that electromagnetic relationship IS the law of attraction, and it's constant. We're endlessly magnetically attracting, and repelling, various aspects of material reality, based on the moment-by-moment choices we make. Most of which aren't conscious choices, by the way. Which explains a lot, I think, about the nature of the world we see.

But anyway, my point here, is that the law of attraction, IS in evidence even while we're in divine flow. It's not a separate phenomenon happening outside of true natural abundance. The law of attraction is operating everywhere. So when we're in that effortless flow, it's indeed the law of attraction that brings to us the aspects of materiality, that arrive as part of our divine flow of giving and receiving.

But this law of attraction is equally present and functioning all the rest of the time, too, even when we're way out of alignment and flow. Because electromagnetic attraction is the way you get to experience life as a person living in your world. It's how things work, for better and worse.

I'm bringing all this up because I want to make it clear: This law of attraction mechanism that we're talking about here—yes, it's present within the effortless divine flow of giving and receiving, because it's present everywhere.

But it doesn't even begin to describe the magnificent properties of true natural abundance—the kind of abundance that is a natural reflection of your own true divine identity. It doesn't even touch it. Even though the law of attraction is present and functioning within it.

And let me back up here and say that there's obviously nothing wrong with law of attraction practices, which seek to master that universal law. It's just that true natural abundance is of a far greater order of magnitude than this. There's no comparison.

What are the differences?

Well, the most fundamental difference between them, is the one from which all the other differences spring: True natural abundance is a sacred function of the limitless divine--which means everyone and everything it touches, is perfumed by grace.

It's of the highest, most limitless frequencies, so its effects are of highest frequency as well. Whereas a practice of trying to master the universal law of attraction is not. It's not any of those things. So the approach for one, versus the other, is very different.

You see, true natural abundance isn't about gaming the system. And this is really important. Unlike what you do when you're trying to master the law of attraction, with true natural abundance, you don't pick and choose what you want to receive from a giant cosmic shopping mall. In fact, you couldn't possibly do that—because that kind of lower frequency attempt at control, would immediately pull you out of the divine flow.

Natural abundance means you're completely open to miracles. It means you are trusting divine flow to fulfill your needs more beautifully than you yourself could ever do.

Trusting. There's that word again. Trusting in the divine, more than you trust in your own egoic ideas of what will make you happy.

With true natural abundance, you are willing to release control over that process. Which means, you're not responsible for charting your own course toward happiness and fulfillment anymore, because you've relinquished that job. You're not the captain of that ship. And you're not in charge.

So you might be thinking, well, Okay, maybe I won't be the captain anymore. But can't I even steer the boat a little bit, toward being able to receive more of what I want?

Well, yes, absolutely. But maybe not in the way you've been taught. Because, you know, very broadly speaking, the reason most of us might be attracted to a law of attraction practice in the first place, is that we are coming from an underlying place of lack.

And then we try to manifest the things we think will mitigate that lack. Which, honestly, never really works out--Not the way we hope it will, anyway. And because the frequency of all that, isn't compatible with pure divine flow, it actually isn't possible to do any of that kind of manipulation stuff, with true natural abundance.

The manipulation efforts for how to attract what we want, in those classic law of attraction practices...you're probably familiar with them already:

You decide what you want and then, you know, you're going through the motions of pretending you already have it; you're stepping into a future where that thing is already yours; making vision boards, whatever; feeling happy because it's already yours, and all of that kind of stuff; in order to juice up the electromagnetic properties of manifestation.

And it does work sometimes. Of course it does. But it's artificially induced abundance. It's short lived, and most importantly: it always has unintended consequences connected to it. Because the whole manipulation effort was conceived and executed at a lower frequency level.

And because it comes from a lower bandwidth, all the other kinds of things that live at that same lower frequency level will naturally tend to show up too, as time goes on.

So that job promotion that we wanted so badly, as one example, brings a whole host of new issues and problems with it. It doesn't bring the freedom or happiness we hoped it would. Why? Because, spoiler alert: freedom and happiness actually live at a higher frequency level than that.

It's all about the frequency

The stuff we manifest via the law of attraction practices, rarely brings true win-win scenarios. Which is another incredibly important way they differ from true natural abundance.

With the law of attraction practices, there are nearly always winners and losers involved--because that's the lack-based frequency level those practices tend to be coming from. That doesn't make them bad or wrong. But it's just a good idea to be aware of their inherent shortcomings.

Because anywhere there are winners and losers, longterm happiness or satisfaction does not tend to accumulate. For anybody.

But win-win, on the other hand, is one of the definite hallmarks of divine flow. Everyone's happiness is nurtured, including yours. Everybody wins, every time, even if the outcomes don't look like what you were expecting. In high frequency divine flow, it couldn't be any other way.

Of course, this kind of miraculous outcome can only happen if you're not incessantly grabbing the wheel and trying to act as the ship's captain.

Win-win is the exclusive property of the divine. Because true win-win, which is actually more like: win-win-win-win-win, is actually a divine frequency. It's a byproduct of infinite love. And it's obviously never you in charge of it.

Divine win-win is born of infinite wisdom, and knowing, of what will allow every single being to thrive in the way that's most perfect for them.

So, win-win is really what we're after, here. So that means then, that the idea of steering the ship toward the things you want to see happen, comes about in a very different way. There's no manipulation.

It has to do, instead, with aligning ourselves in high frequency, in a very particular, and very genuinely joyous way.

And this is something that happens quite naturally. It happens, when you bring back your childlike connection to pure possibility. And this isn't artificial. This isn't you, trying to manipulate the universe. That won't really work. This is your genuine enthusiasm for the things that interest and delight you. And it's you pursuing those ideas, without any self imposed limits.

What do I mean by that. Think back. Remember what it was like, to be 4 years old, and to settle on a future career as a cowboy-slash-astronaut? Or a princess-slash-ballerina? Me, I wanted to be a commercial artist-slash-cartoon character. Because, why not?

So, think back to how you saw the world of possibility back then. You were looking purely at what interested you, not at the obstacles in your way. Or whether your choices even made sense.

Your choices seemed perfectly practical and logical--until some adult pointed out why 'cartoon character' is not a viable career. You know?

And this is not just about career choices, by the way. When I was 7, my best friend Joanne very seriously decided her life's ambition was to grow her eyelashes down to the ground and part them in the middle. I cannot say why. But she herself, saw no reason why not. And it didn't matter to her at all, what the naysayers said.

So fast forward now, to you and me. And for us, forget the eyelashes maybe, but it's all about rekindling that connection to pure possibility, and curiosity and enthusiasm. Just because. You know? What really interests you? For now, forget about whether it's even possible. Or which insurmountable obstacles are in your way. None of that even really matters, here.

We're looking to find that uncensored inner desire again. And lose the cynical, jaded adult--which is just a defense we've all built up against a world designed for disappointment—which is actually, honestly, a world that is on its way out the door.

Technically speaking, it's a world that is already gone—although we're still very much feeling its effects as if it was still here. But that won't last indefinitely. It can't.

The earth's frequencies, and our own, have already risen past that point. So, now we're standing in the doorway, collectively poised to enter an unknown realm of pure possibility.

And pure possibility is the language of your divine self. That's my point, here. So anytime you let yourself go and authentically tap into that, you're not only having fun exploring what you really want to be doing, you're also in total energetic alignment with the frequencies of divine flow.

So, dare to dream with your whole heart. Imagine just what kinds of far fetched inspirations or creations might bring you joy—but then, and this is the really important bit-- let it go. REALLY-- let it go.

Release it, and give your dreams back to the love that you are. And by all means, still take those actions to play with your heart's desire interests—like, if you decide to start a hobby or a project, in other words. Go for it, and immerse yourself in it, and enjoy every minute, purely for its own sake.

But by letting it go I mean: don't demand that it leads you directly to something greater. Don't try to turn that passion into your new career, in other words.

Because that's just you trying to grab the wheel and steer the boat again. That's you, getting in the way, and shutting down the flow.

Let go of the process, and trust that the gifts and opportunities that come, will be very much in line with the feelings of your spontaneity and joyful inspiration.

It might not look anything like you expected, but it will incorporate more of that amazing feeling than you dreamed possible. And it will positively reek of win-win. Because your alignment with the flow of divinity guarantees it.

To experience true natural abundance is to touch into the incredible majesty of your own divine light. First of all, to learn how to align with that light, and then, begin to rest within it. And eventually, to hold that light as your own identity. That's a truly beautiful process.

And by the way, to hold our own divine light in a stable, ongoing way—which is what it takes to know ourselves permanently AS the pristine infinity loop of giving and receiving—that process of learning how to hold our own divine light, is something that our whole entire self engages in.

It's a process that is bio-chemical, bio-electrical. Bio-physical. Bio-energetic. Even bio-genetic, because your DNA wakes up too.

All of this --and probably lots more that I don't know about—works together and takes us on an incredible journey, of becoming ever clearer and lighter, and freer, in all aspects of our being.

And then along with all of that divine activity, there's also the geo-magnetic bit. And that's the part that allows for manifestation of materiality, AKA the law of attraction. So, the law of attraction is, indeed, huge—but it's only the tiniest portion of who and what you really are.

So I hope that makes it clear, what the differences are. True natural abundance is you, coming to recognize firsthand that you and your Source really are one. And your Source is truly limitless, you know? Everything is possible. Everything is here for you. Everything IS you.

So put your full trust in this incredibly beautiful process, of coming to know who you really are. Trust in your own divine identity.

Trust that your life already knows what will delight you and bring joy to you, and value to all others around you. And trust in the sublime beauty of win-win.
